Southern Adelaide Show their generosity to the Salvo's

Member for Kingston, Amanda Rishworth, congratulates Southern Adelaide residents for once again banding together to support the Red Shield Appeal. The interim result, as of Monday morning, was over $21,000, which is an encouraging increase on last year's collections.

Amanda hit the pavement over the weekend knocking on Seaford Rise residents to help raise money for over one million Australians in need.

"It was a pleasure to take part in the Salvation Army's major annual fundraising event to help reach the national target for 2008 of $68 million," Amanda said.

"Despite growing pressures on working families, Southern Adelaide residents dug deep to support the Red Shield Appeal".

"Residents contributions were overwhelming and greatly appreciated," Amanda said.

"I have experienced firsthand the invaluable contribution the Salvation Army's volunteers make in our community and the weekends Red Shield Appeal was of no exception," Amanda said.

Amanda joined over 200 Southern Adelaide people who volunteered their time to help raise vital funds for the Salvation Army.

"Across our nation, its volunteers and organisations like the Salvation Army that protect and support our local communities and many other positive activities."

"Volunteering for the Salvation Army gives all of us a chance to give something back to our community," Amanda said.

"It is not too late to help the Salvation Army reach their target," Amanda said.
